When Chinua Achebe wrote Things Fall Apart in the late 1950s, he was responding to centuries of European writing that had portrayed Africa as a "dark continent," plagued by savagery and superstition. Negative European representations of Africa functioned in multiple, contradictory ways. They situated "darkest Africa" in contrast to an Enlightened Europe, which affirmed both the spiritual and material superiority of European civilization.

In the 1950s, Achebe was one of the founders of a Nigerian literary movement that drew upon the traditional oral culture of its indigenous peoples. In 1959, he published Things Fall Apart as a response to novels, such as Joseph Conrad's Heart of Darkness, that treat Africa as a primordial and cultureless foil for Europe. Tired of reading white men's accounts of how primitive, socially backward, and, most important, language-less native Africans were, Achebe sought to convey a fuller ...
